THE BOYS' BRIGADE

Dave Marshall still has his Boys' Brigade Signaller's Certificate from the 1950s

I took great care to keep my pillbox hat clean

Smooth FM DJ Dave Marshall was a member in the 1950s

"I was in the 128th Glasgow Company. We lived in Williamwood Avenue and it was based at Williamwood Church, just across the road.

"My abiding memory was the uniform and marching - the 'pillbox' hats and the amount of effort we put in to make sure we looked smart for inspection.

"The hat had two white bands around it that had to be pristine, and I was forever polishing my belt buckle and my shoes, and using sandshoe whitener making sure those bands were clean! "Part of the thinking was to teach you things you would not be taught at school.

"I remember working towards certificates for different things. I received one for semaphore and another for Bible knowledge.

"But it was fun. It had to be, otherwise I would never have gone.

"At that time every boy was a member of something, whether it was the BBs or the Scouts. There was a lot of rivalry between ourselves and the Scouts.

"By the time we were in our late teens the Scouts had the upper hand - they were closer to the Guides so were nearer the girls!"

Football and fun, what more could we ask for?

STV news presenter John MacKay was a member of the 167th Glasgow company

"For me it was football and I think that was a big draw for a lot of members.

"Look at some of the famous names who used to be in the Boys' Brigade - Ally McCoist, Sir Alex Ferguson, Murdo MacLeod. A lot of those who played football for the BB went on to become professional players.

"People make too much of the religious element to the organisation. It played its part and we attended church and marched on certain days, but that was only one aspect of it.

"It was great fun - we went off to camp, you made new friends and a lot of the people you went to school with were also members.

"I have fond memories of it all and it was important socially because it gave kids something to do. It gave us the opportunity to play football in the middle of winter and we learned new skills in an enjoyable way.

"It is a great organisation and I am still involved with my company. We have an annual dinner to raise money for the BB. I'm proud of my association."

SURE & STEADFAST

WELCOME TO OUR CELEBRATION OF 125 YEARS OF THE BOYS' BRIGADE

It started as an idea to help discipline some boys in a Sunday School class, but 125 years later the Boys' Brigade is still going strong.

The organisation, founded by William Smith, is the oldest uniformed children's group in the world ... and it all began in Glasgow.

Smith was a teacher in the North Woodside Mission Sunday School. The boys in his class were a bit of a handful and he asked others if they had any ideas to help him keep control of them.

He was a lieutenant in the 1st Lanarkshire Rifle Volunteers and someone remarked a bit of his 'Army discipline' might be what was needed. That gave Smith, later to become Sir William, the inspiration to start the Boys' Brigade.

That group in the North Woodside Mission Halls became the 1st Glasgow Company, and today there are companies and battalions all over Britain and as far afield as Malaysia, Nigeria and South Africa.

As well as camping and working towards their Queen's Award - the organisation's highest award - members today are involved in a wide variety of activities, from snowboarding in the Highlands, swimming in the Mediterranean, and playing football, to helping numerous charity projects.

The organisation still has a Christian heart - its motto Sure And Steadfast comes from the Bible - but the BB attracts people from all faiths, places, schools and backgrounds.

In Glasgow, more than 4000 boys and teenagers swell the ranks of its companies, and in its celebration year the organisation wants to attract more.

During 2008 there will be parties, marches and events across the world to celebrate its 125th birthday.

To mark the occasion, the Evening Times has created this celebratory pull-out, including photographs of dozens of companies.

You will also find contact details on the back page for the organisation, where your nearest company is and where and when they meet.
